FORTI

An initiative aimed at the public of readers and the international editorial world (publishing houses, literary agencies, editors, and translators) promoted by the Italian Cultural Institute of New York directed by Fabio Finotti with the collaboration of the FUIS (Italian Unitary Federation of Writers), with the artistic direction of Maria Ida Gaeta supported by a leading group of scholars and experts (Alessandro Giammei, Chiara Benetollo, Monica Calabritto, Luca Briasco, Eugenio Refini).

Voices from Contemporary Italian Fiction

Multipli Forti is a transatlantic window on the major literary trends of current Italian fiction, told by the authors who are writing it.

We asked them to think about six major themes that shape today's literature in their language. Each event of Multipli Forti will revolve around their reactions to these themes, which took the form of short stories, literary memories and meditations, swift little essays and, in some cases, even personal confessions.

The first theme is that of individual and collective destinies, along a line that connects Dante to contemporary attempts to write in the first person while writing about the whole world.

The second theme is that of "Italianness" itself, and of how what we call "Italian Literature" is really informed by foreign, alien, and stranger, vital influences.

The hand-to-hand combat with reality constitutes a third theme: that of political engagement, from the Renaissance concept of inchiesta to the current hybridizations of fiction and reportage.

The fourth is the theme of classicism--of how, even in very new forms, a traditional idea of the novel still endures.

The fifth theme is that of autoscopy : literary journeys into the self (auto-fiction, auto-theory, autobiography).

The last theme is the theme of places: of vernacular and dialectal traditions in a land of proudly different territories, of the thin line that separates the familiar and the unknown.
